About the Author

L. M. Elliott wrote for the Washingtonian magazine, in the nation's capital, for eighteen years before devoting her time to writing fiction for children and young adults. She is author of the WWII novel Under a War-Torn Sky, a Notable Children's Trade Book in the Field of Social Studies (NCSS/CBC). Her novel Flying South, set in 1968, won the Joan G. Sugarman Children's Book Award. Elliott is also author of the picture book Hunter's Best Friend at School, an IRA/CBC Children's Choice, illustrated by Lynn Munsinger. The book is part of a series about friendship, competition, popularity, and sibling rivalry. Elliott lives in Virginia with her family.
