About This Guide

HarperCollins Children's Books is pleased to offer a variety of fiction and nonfiction books that explore African American history and culture. The fabric of the American population is becoming more racially and ethnically diverse, and it is crucial that children's books have characters that represent this. The following collection of African American literature is undoubtedly important for all children, both because it provides recognizable histories and cultures for children of color and because it introduces new perspectives for all children. This guide is designed to provide a spectrum of curricular activities and connections among the selected titles.

Fight for Freedom

The first two sections of this guide are organized by Historical titles and African American Biographies and explore slave history and the civil rights movement. The books and suggested activities probe the notion of freedom, and look at how slaves and abolitionists fought for the freedom of black people.

Found Identity

The next two sections include Legends and Art titles and present African American art, poetry, and traditional tales. The suggested activities incorporate black history and illustrate how this history has influenced art, literature, and music.

Fabric of Faces

This guide concludes with a selection of Multicultural titles, which convey the message that each of us has a unique history. By sharing our stories with one another, we can weave new communities and greater understanding of our diverse heritage.

HISTORICAL TITLES

The migration from the South has been a significant part of African American history. Before slavery was outlawed in the United States in 1865, abolitionists formed underground organizations to help slaves escape—these became known as the Underground Railroad. In the early 1900s, thousands of African Americans moved to the North to seek economic and social freedom—a movement known as the Great Migration. Explore these two periods of history in the picture book titles God Bless the Child and Barefoot: Escape on the Underground Railroad.

God Bless the Child

By Billie Holiday and

Amistad

In this picture book interpretation of the classic jazz song “God Bless the Child,” renowned illustrator Jerry Pinkney has created images of a family moving from the rural South to the urban North during the Great Migration.

At the end of God Bless the Child, Jerry Pinkney describes his research process for illustrating this book. After reading his “Artist’s Note,” compare his portrayal of the South and North. Notice the details that are used to differentiate between these two settings during the era of the Great Migration—look at the people’s clothes, surroundings, etc.

Barefoot: Escape on the Underground Railroad

By Pamela Duncan Edwards
Illustrated by Henry Cole
Ages 5–9 • Grades K–4
Tr 0-06-027137-X
Pb 0-06-443519-9

In this story of courage, an escaping slave’s experience is seen through the eyes of animals along the Underground Railroad.

Introduction:

Write the word freedom on the blackboard or on chart paper, and ask students what freedom means to them. How would they feel if their freedom was taken away?

Writing Activity: Underground Railroad

Explain that the Underground Railroad was not literally a railroad but an underground network of people. Introduce famous leaders of the Underground Railroad. Have students imagine that they are “conductors,” working as part of the Underground Railroad network, and ask them to record their experiences in a writing journal. Leading questions are: What would you need to know to help slaves escape to the North? How would you build trust with escaping slaves and their families? Would you tell your neighbors that you were part of the Underground Railroad?

Art Activity: Read a Song, Paint a Song

Play the song “God Bless the Child,” and have students think about how Jerry Pinkney’s art complements the lyrics and why. Look at the spread in the cotton fields, and discuss how traditional slave songs were sung to express slaves’ hope for freedom while they worked. Log on to the Index of Spiritual Titles website (http://xroads.virginia.edu/~HYPER/TWH/TWH\_index.html) and read other traditional songs to the class. Select an appropriate slave song (or have the class choose a favorite song) and organize a classroom project to illustrate a picture book to the lyrics, as Jerry Pinkney did for “God Bless the Child.” Before beginning, discuss images and art mediums that would best express the chosen song.

AFRICAN AMERICAN BIOGRAPHIES

The courageous acts of many people led to the abolition of slavery and the achievement of civil rights. Introduce students to some of these famous people.

I've Seen the Promised Land: The Life of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

- Notable Children's Trade Book in the Field of Social Studies (NCSS/CBC)

This is a biography of the courageous woman who helped to spark the modern civil rights movement when she refused to give up her bus seat to a white passenger.

Introduction:

Lead a class discussion about heroism. Ask students to name qualities that are heroic and why. What is the difference between a hero and a leader? Name some famous people who were recognized for their work only after they died.

Art Activity: Hero Certificates

Read any of the biography titles listed above to introduce the lesson. Ask students to name people who make the world a better place to live. How? Have students think about people in their own lives who have helped them during a difficult time. Photocopy a blank certificate, with space to write a person's name and heroic act. Have students fill in the name of their personal hero on the certificate and write a sentence about what this person did to help them. Students can also draw a picture of their hero.

Research Activity, Part 1: Gathering Facts

Assign students to small groups to research one of the historical figures listed below. Each group should research a different person. Provide the following guidelines for fact gathering: write the years of this person's lifetime on a pink Post-it note; write where this person lived on a blue Post-it note; write the person's major contribution to the American civil rights movement on a yellow Post-it note; and write one other interesting fact on a green Post-it note.

- Frederick Douglass
- Martin Luther King, Jr.
- Sojourner Truth
- Nat Turner
- Marcus Garvey
- Malcolm X
- Harriet Tubman
- Booker T. Washington

Research Activity, Part 2: Time Line

On the board or on chart paper, create a time line spanning from 1800 through the present. Use this time line to present students' findings from the above activity. Have each group read aloud facts about the person they researched, and then place their Post-it notes on the time line. Students should record information about each historical figure into their notebooks and use the information to complete the enclosed reproducible African Americans in History crossword puzzle (answers below). Make arrangements for other classrooms to view this time line of events from the American civil rights movement.

Across: 1. Frederick Douglass 2. Sojourner Truth 3. Harriet Tubman 4. Nat Turner
Down: 1. Booker T. Washington 2. Martin Luther King, Jr. 3. Malcolm X 4. Marcus Garvey

LEGENDS

Legends are stories that are handed down from earlier times and provide accounts of historical periods or events. Oftentimes legends are exaggerated with descriptions to keep them interesting and memorable. Storytelling, or oral history, is one way to preserve memories. All families and cultures have oral histories, so that each generation can pass along traditions to the next one.

Pb 0-06-054061-3
• Publishers Weekly Best Book

In this original tall tale, Jerdine Nolen has created a John Henry–sized hero with the strength of fifty men, a heart as big as all outdoors, and a mysterious gift at spirited slaves away to freedom.

In the front pages of Big Jabe, author Jerdine Nolen's dedication reads: "For all those, long gone, who gave help, tried to help, or wanted to help, and made some lives roll easier." After studying the history of slavery, name some of the people who you think inspired her to write this tale.

Introduction:

Introduce students to the central components of legends and record them on chart paper:

1. Define myth, legend, folktale.
2. Identify main character and voice in selected reading.
3. Identify the theme or moral in selected reading.
4. Identify the legend's context in selected reading.

Read Big Jabe aloud to the class. As a class, identify examples of the above components and write them on the chart paper. This will provide a model for students to complete the following writing activity.

Writing Activity:

Speak Your Family's Legend

Students will write their own legends following the above model. The story should revolve around a familiar family tale. Leading questions are: At family gatherings, is there a funny story that is repeatedly told? Think of a grandparent or another older family member and the stories this person has shared about his or her childhood.

Once _____ students have identified a family anecdote, ask them to use steps one through four as a pre-writing exercise. Have students share their completed stories in small groups or to the whole class.

Geography Activity: Explore Africa!

Photocopy a map of the African continent and have students locate the following countries, where the stories in A Pride of African Tales originated.

- Cameroon
- Congo
- Democratic Republic of Congo
- Ghana
- Nigeria
- Republic of Zaire

Ask students to color each country and make a corresponding color key. As an extension activity, older students can include population, climate, and topographical information on their maps.

AFRICAN AMERICAN ART

During the 1920s, between World Wars I and II, African American art, music, and literature gained recognition as a significant cultural movement. This era is known as the Harlem Renaissance. Many people of color from the South and the Caribbean moved to Harlem in New York City during this period, and this blending of cultures helped African American art to flourish. Memory and personal experience provide inspiration for music, art, and literature; thus slave history and the struggle for freedom are an integral part of African American literature.

Like the nest of eggs that becomes, in the title poem, "a mighty nest full of stars," this book awakens us to the magic in our everyday world. Berry draws upon his Caribbean childhood to capture the universal experience of growing up.

Introduction:

Read Beauty, Her Basket by Sandra Belton aloud to the class. Point out how the young girl character and her cousin weave together their Nana's stories to discover the meaning of their African American history.

Art/Social Studies Activity: Class Quilt

Create a class quilt to celebrate the American civil rights movement.

Step 1: Poetry and Weaving

Read the poems "Whole Cloth" and "Weaving a World" from Aneesa Lee and the Weaver's Gift by Nikki Grimes. Both poems describe weaving as an art form that meshes together separate threads or colors or people into a harmonious whole. In these poems, yarn is a symbol used to represent and express the poet's thoughts.

Step 2: Creating Fabric

Read aloud I've Seen the Promised Land: The Life of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. by Walter Dean Myers. Introduce civil rights vocabulary, and brainstorm examples that describe the concepts of equality, freedom, hope, and peace. Provide one-by-four-inch strips of colored construction paper and have students choose four strips. On their strips, challenge students to draw a picture that expresses each of these four concepts. For example, students can draw a picture of an integrated school to illustrate equality.

Step 3: Freedom Weaving

Assign students to pairs. Have the two students in each pair weave their eight paper strips together to make a four-by-four-inch square. Each square represents an important piece of the American civil rights movement.

Step 4: Class Quilt

Have students contribute their four-by-four-inch woven squares, and display all squares together on a bulletin board to make a class quilt. Remind students that this quilt represents equality, freedom, hope, and peace in your classroom.

MULTICULTURAL TITLES

The following picture books celebrate the diversity and unique characteristics of each ethnic group within the American mosaic. Share these books with your class to introduce characters of color to your students, and to send the important message that each of them is special for who they are.

These poems and images rejoice in the spirit of individuality that comes from having your unique crowning glory, and share what is special about hair that is dreadlocked, braided, adorned, or worn free.

Introduction:

Lead a class discussion about the ways that all people are the same and prompt students to think about nonphysical attributes that people share.

Art Activity: All the Colors of Me—A Self-Portrait

Introduce activity by reading All the Colors of the Earth by Sheila Hamanaka. Ask students to look carefully at the colors used in the illustrations. Then have students draw pictures that depict their own unique characteristics—including physical qualities (different skin colors, hair colors, eye colors, etc.) and nonphysical qualities (musical, funny, smart, kind, etc.).

Unity Activity: Friendship

We often learn about diversity and unity through friendships. Pair each student with a classmate and ask them to think about the similarities and differences between themselves. Have students fold a piece of paper in half and list "How we are the same" on one side and "How we are different" on the other side. Leading questions are:

How many people are in your family? How many siblings do you have? This example shows that people are similar because we all have families, but at the same time we all have differences within our families.

**Practice your graphing and math skills with the enclosed reproducible activity sheet!

Math Activity: Many Places and Faces in Our Community

Where are you from? Lead a discussion by asking students where they were born, or where their ancestors were born. Mark each of the countries on a classroom map and point out the diversity among the class. Use the enclosed reproducible and have students create a bar graph of the ethnic backgrounds represented in the class. As an extension activity, research the ethnic population of your city or town and have students chart a bar graph of the community's ethnic backgrounds. Compare the classroom graph to the community graph and make ratios.
